It appears to be based on Russell 1836 and 1837 and Hoddle 1839a and to have been worked on progressively by Russell, Hoddle (and possibly Perry) between 1837 and at least 1847, as the town developed. It has had various titles, including one “shewing four wards”. An 1847 version is available at MULib. S. Perry might have been responsible for some of the editions. It was sometimes labelled as the “Melbourne New Town”. The 1840 date is based on notes on the drawing stating that this was the year in which Hoddle submitted the Plan to the Surveyor General in Sydney. However, an M/31 edition of the map is dated by Hoddle as submitted (? illegible) on 3 Feb 1840. Another edition is M/7.

Notes for Sub-chapter 8.1

¹ Coanes are remembered by Coane St in Glenhuntly. A biography is available in Victorian Hist J, 49, 119-128.

Notes for Sub-chapter 8.2

² de Gruchy's maps are sometimes dated much later (e.g. 1874) but Leeuwenberg thinks that they may date from the early 1850s and notes that some parts are actually based on 1848 surveys. Relative to other maps, the material referenced in this work best represents the mid-1850s.

³ Thomas Ham's work as a surveyor is nicely recorded in Tom Darragh's introduction to Ham 1985.
