Ian joined the CRB in the early 1960s. Records show that he was employed in the Traffic and Location (T & L) Section in 1968, when Robin Underwood was T & L Engineer and Don Pritchard was Assistant T & L Engineer. Ian was attached to the Traffic Design section headed by Ted Barton and at that time Ian was classified as Eng Class 2 working on the original program of railway level crossing elimination/removal. Reorganisation within the CRB in 1969/70 resulted in the creation of the Traffic Engineering Division and its organisation chart for 1972 shows Ian as Engineer CI 2 in a Traffic Design group under David Freeman as part of the Engineer's Training Scheme. At that time Max McPherson was the Traffic Engineer and Ted Barton, the Assistant Traffic Engineer.

In about 1976, when Ted Barton was appointed Traffic Engineer (replacing Max Macpherson) Ian headed the Traffic Surveys Group under Assistant Traffic Engineer, Keith Hastings and was responsible for all traffic surveys, including (at that time) the annual March Census, speed studies, origin /destination studies, vehicle characteristics and 'swept path' investigations and for liaison with Regional Divisions on these matters.

In about 1983 when the CRB was abolished by the creation of the RCA and RTA and the movement of a large proportion of the Traffic Engineer's staff to the RTA, Ian stayed with the RCA in the Traffic Engineering Group and became responsible for street lighting work associated with the cost sharing arrangement set up by the Government. This involved checking the lighting layout design and performance of schemes submitted by municipal councils with an application for cost sharing between Municipal Councils, the State Electricity Commission and the RCA. In later years Ian became secretary to the cost sharing committee and continued in this role up to his retirement.

Ian was a foundation member of the Victorian AITPM which was formed in 1995. He held roles of treasurer and secretary and was a major player in organising first AITPM national conference held in Melbourne 1997.

Ian suffered from dementia in his final years and passed away on 12 Sep 24.
